

From then to forever
 I never forgot
 the place where I saw the moment
 that never escaped the captured intentions
 of your fragile
 world.
 The church doors
 Made a fire
 And consumed
 You.

We will never meet
 again
 polarized by the heat.
 You flew into the beloved
obscurity
 to pioneer
 the uncharted
 world.

Kunsole Welcomes All Ghosts

we are taker/breakers and we love u we are teachers and we learn from u & when we dance and fight and cry we fill our holes with your names

www.kunsole.com

We are künsöle

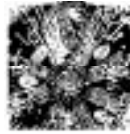

we come from the west
where the land stops and thoughts turn inward we are not what is known we know not what is said

We are k'hole

We have no center only edges we have no objects only names we sing to attract to us things we found our outfits by the river the river runs through the forest to the sea where the ghosts live

We are kusöle

we read in the sun, summer, winter & fall when we are mad we break cargo and make jewelry with the pieces this is for you, we sing to the plants We give kunsu to the Anasaara.

THIS IS NOT TRUTH

speaks power

By art we mean philosophy.

By sin we mean violence.

1. Paper, I understand, was invented by the Chinese; Western paper is to us no more than something to be used, while the texture of Chinese paper and Japanese paper gives us a certain feeling of warmth, of calm and repose.

2. Another way to color noise is to delay the noise for N seconds, and add this to the undelayed noise.

3. The Kunsu, who in the past were hunters, have in recent years embraced a more sedentary lifestyle that includes farming on land that is cleared by members. They raise maize, yams, beans, and also domesticated animals, including cows, pigs, goats, and chickens. Fishing is performed using nets fashioned by members, and hunting is still considered to be of ritual importance and serves as a powerful metaphor in most communities.

4. Localization refers to the ability of the ear to detect the location from which a sound emanates.

5. I, the Hauka non-believer, am going to give kunsu to the Anasaara. Anasaara. Anasaara. This is for you.
